1	I wish could answer both yes and no to this. I feel there is some sharing, but it's usually just they had a good day and ate well, very little detail. I'm sure it's hard to remember all the kids, but I've also encountered bigger issues going on the in classroom that we had to discover, rather than being proactively notified.	9/18/2015 1:52 PM
2	They know what we did over the weekend, they ask how it went. I don't feel like I compromise in this room at all.	9/10/2015 10:07 AM

1	Yes, but unless my timing is off, I find it odd when there are 2 teachers in a room and both have schedules that mean they are gone by 5pm. I'd think most parents pick up after 5pm so it'd be nice if one of the primary teachers is still there.	9/18/2015 1:52 PM

However, I feel sometimes discipline issues are not taken seriously enough, nor does the center have a progressive discipline procedure (something most centers and all schools have). 1	The food menu either went through time where it was not published, or it is no longer published. After regularly checking we tried to find it unsuccessfully long enough that we've given up looking. Can I pack a PBandJ today or will they have peanut butter and crackers for snack? Is the food menu consistently published, or published at all? I'm trapped by pizza Mondays. I feel guilty, but not guilty enough to pack something healthier than pizza. I think we would pack lunches Mondays if it meant reducing the cost of tuition and pizza wasn't provided. Then I can eat pizza again on Sundays without anyone I'm married to saying, "no, our son/daughter will have pizza tomorrow!" Son/daughter? Ha, we already figured out who this is.	9/10/2015 12:14 PM

6	I've seen numerous instances where proper ratios are not being maintained in my child's classroom. I understand things get chaotic, but staff must do a better job of managing this.	9/2/2015 12:38 PM

8	We love EC3. Thank you.	9/1/2015 7:59 PM
9	I am very happy with our choice in child care provider. However, I was very disappointed with the recent decision to do away with the "sibling discount." As a family who has had (and will continue to have) multiple children there at once, the bi-weekly bill is a budget buster. The relief provided by that discount was appreciated. Beyond being a nice benefit for the families paying the largest tuition bills each period, it seemed to be justifiable as well. Some of the administrative overhead (billing/collecting, program direction, communications, parking, etc.) are no greater for my household than they are for a family with one child at EC3.	9/1/2015 3:05 PM
